This year the Division will invest nearly $3 million
in more than 100 arts and community organizations

Wilmington, Del. (July 8, 2021) – The Delaware Division of the Arts is investing nearly $3 million in more than 100 arts and community organizations that will serve Delawareans statewide with arts programming and services, arts education, and arts marketing and promotion. This first round of funding for FY2022 includes: General Operating Support, Project Support, Arts Stabilization, StartUp and Education Resource grants.

“As Delaware rebounds from the past 18 months, the arts community continues to generate an abundance of creative activity in our communities—from Claymont to Selbyville. This investment in the arts sector—artists and organizations alike—enhances education, stimulates local economies, and enriches our communities,” said Paul Weagraff, director of the Delaware Division of the Arts.

Grant review panels made up of Delaware artists, arts educators, arts and nonprofit organization administrators, corporate and fundraising managers, and interested community members, provided an impartial peer review of these grant applications based on established evaluation criteria, reflecting the importance of having diverse public and expert participation in the grant-making process.

The awards include:

- General Operating Support for sixty-one (61) arts organizations.
- Project Support for twenty-three (23) community-based organizations that provide arts programming for children and adults with physical or intellectual disabilities; students whose schools are under-resourced and face multiple barriers, individuals and family members dealing with cancer; and young children and community members from across Delaware.
- Six (6) Arts Stabilization projects that support capital improvements and repairs to facilities owned by arts organizations.
- StartUp Support for one emerging arts organization, providing a combination of technical assistance and financial support for this new organization.
- Fourteen (14) education-based partnerships between Delaware's schools, arts organizations and artists that provide teacher training and standards-based arts learning experiences for pre K-12 students statewide, in alignment with the Delaware Standards for Learning in the Visual and Performing Arts.
